

Agency implementation checklist

Public-facing setup

Create one concise homepage headline: “One team. Multiple specialties. Complete solutions.” Present the agency as a multidisciplinary creative, business, technology, publishing, media, marketing, and e-commerce team supported by AI. Display major departments, not an overwhelming list of individual services.

Create landing pages for the first three revenue offers: Business Formation and Online-Reseller Readiness, Brand and Website Launch, and Book Development and Launch. Each page should explain the outcome, deliverables, exclusions, timeline, starting price, and next step.

Intake fields

Collect the customer’s name, email, phone, desired outcome, business or project type, location, target audience, current stage, required services, deadline, budget range, existing assets, preferred communication channel, and whether the project involves legal, tax, financial, medical, immigration, employment, licensing, or other regulated matters.

For business-formation and reseller requests, also collect proposed business name, current business status, entity type if already chosen, operating address situation, desired marketplace, product category, supplier status, inventory status, expected sales channels, and whether the client has a business bank account, EIN, insurance, licenses, and product-compliance documents.

Routing labels

Use department labels such as Creative, Publishing, Video, Audio, Web, Technology, AI Automation, Business Formation, E-Commerce, Marketing, Consulting, Career, Data, Administrative, and Specialized Services. Add engagement labels: Individual Service, Project Package, End-to-End Solution, Consultation, or Ongoing Retainer.

Add risk labels: Professional Referral Required, Identity Verification Required, Sensitive Data, Regulated Industry, Marketplace Approval Risk, and Human Review Required.

Minimum workflow

1. AI receptionist receives the inquiry.
2. Intake system creates a customer record.

3. AI classifies the desired outcome and likely services.
4. A human reviews complex, regulated, sensitive, or high-value requests.
5. The agency sends a scope summary and either a fixed-price proposal or consultation invitation.
6. Client approves scope, terms, and payment.
7. Project workspace, folders, tasks, and responsible specialist are created.
8. Work is produced and reviewed internally.
9. Client receives deliverables and handoff instructions.
10. Follow-up identifies referrals, maintenance, marketplace operations, content, coaching, or growth opportunities.

Account-security rules

The client owns the primary email, phone number, domain, tax identifiers, identity documents, bank account, payment cards, marketplace profiles, and recovery methods. Use delegated access wherever possible. Do not request or retain passwords when an invitation-based permission system is available. Do not create client marketplace or banking accounts using agency identity, address, tax ID, phone, or payment details.

Initial service packages

Launch with five packages: Business Setup Roadmap; Formation and Administrative Coordination; Online Reseller and Marketplace Launch; Brand and Website Launch; and Monthly Business, Store, and Marketing Support. Keep other capabilities available as custom services until demand and capacity are proven.

Quality-control checkpoints

Before delivery, confirm that the scope was followed, names and numbers are accurate, links work, files open, branding is consistent, product data matches source information, platform policies were not misrepresented, regulated advice was not provided, and all client-owned credentials or sensitive documents were returned or securely deleted when no longer necessary.

First operational milestone

Complete one internal demo journey from inquiry to final handoff. Use a fictional or internal project rather than a real client's sensitive data. Test the receptionist message, intake form, routing, proposal, payment step, project creation, quality review, delivery email, and follow-up process before broad promotion.
